DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

1. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless -

- (b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.
- 2. Claims 1 and 5 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Dignard et al. (U.S. 4,662,630). Dignard discloses a striking target device comprising a target body (14) with an inherent main striking area and pivot striking area, a base (49), and a 'pivot mechanism' for pivotally mounting the target body (45) such that the striking area is capable of remaining on a first plane, but pivotable on an axis to a different plane when struck in the pivot striking area. (Note if pin (41) is removed, base can rotate freely). Referring to claim 5, as best understood, Dignard discloses a main striking area on an axis and a pivot striking area extending outwardly from the axis.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

- 3. The text of those sections of Title 35, U.S. Code not included in this action can be found in a prior Office action.
- 4. Claim 14 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Dignard.

 Dignard teaches the claimed structural limitations. The method steps as disclosed are considered obvious as steps one would normally perform when utilizing the device. The feature of having additional units is considered obvious, as it has been held that the mere duplication of parts only involves routine skill in the art.

5. Claims 2, and 6-7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Dignard in view of Warshauer (U.S. 6,033,348). Dignard teaches the claimed invention, including a cam tube, cam follower and guide tube and tension means. Dignard does not specifically teach having the tension means between the tube and follower. Warshauer teaches the desirability of placing the tension means in the form of a coil spring which provides biasing action between the tube and follower in order to aid in providing resistance to striking. In view of the teachings of Warshauer, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of invention to provide Dignard with tension means in order to provide resistance to striking. As best understood, the tension means provide flex means allowing the device to flex across the axis. Referring to claims 7 teaches a flex lock (41) positioned on the means for pivotally mounting.

Response to Arguments

6. Applicant's arguments filed 09/19/2007 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive. The claim language remains broad. The addition of the limitation 'pivot mechanism' absent further structural limitation does not distinguish from the previously rejected claim. Likewise, as best understood, limitations drawn to the biasing nature of the cam follower in conjunction with the tension means is met by the prior art as best understood.

Conclusion

7. THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
